LEGISLATIVE BRIEF

National Housing Transition Act (NHTA)

Federal Legislation to Implement the National Housing Trust Amendment

Purpose

To implement the constitutional right to one dwelling and one commercial property for every adult citizen, ensuring security, stability, and liberty through a National Housing Trust (NHT) that balances federal authority, state autonomy, and private enterprise.

Summary

The National Housing Transition Act (NHTA) establishes the National Housing Trust (NHT), an independent federal institution responsible for guaranteeing each citizen secure access to a dwelling and a commercial property. It creates a permanent National Housing Trust Fund (NHTF), coordinates with the states through compacts, and phases implementation over twenty-five years to protect markets and taxpayers.

Key Provisions

- Establishes the National Housing Trust (NHT) under the executive branch as an independent agency.
- Creates a National Housing Trust Fund (NHTF) financed through progressive contributions, land-use and estate taxes, and federal revenues.
- Maintains private market freedom above the guaranteed baseline.
- Establishes the Office of the Inspector General for Housing with full auditing and investigative powers.
- Coordinates with State Housing Trust Administrations (SHTAs) for local management.
- Implements a four-phase, 25-year transition plan ensuring fiscal balance and public consent.
- Requires public reporting, independent audits, and strict conflict-of-interest provisions for officials.

Benefits to the Nation

- Ends homelessness and housing insecurity permanently.
- Strengthens families, small enterprise, and community stability.
- Boosts GDP and employment through housing and infrastructure growth.
- Restores constitutional balance between liberty and social duty.
- Creates a transparent, self-sustaining trust model shielded from political volatility.

Fiscal Integrity

- Operates under a balanced-budget rule with automatic stabilization reserves.
- Independent Inspector General ensures oversight and accountability.
- Transparent public financial data and audit reports.

- Self-sustaining within 10 years, maintaining modest surpluses thereafter.

Talking Points for Sponsors

“The National Housing Trust Act secures liberty through stability — property for every citizen.”

“We’re restoring the Republic’s promise: freedom through ownership, not dependence.”

“The NHT strengthens both markets and morality — capitalism with a conscience.”

Next Steps

1. Introduce the NHTA concurrently with or following ratification of the National Housing Trust Amendment.
2. Convene hearings in the Judiciary, Housing, and Budget Committees.
3. Coordinate with governors and state legislatures to align local implementation.
4. Launch a national education and advocacy campaign emphasizing liberty, stability, and enterprise.
